Btw - one reason I think the schools are desperate to play is that postponing to spring would give the folks trying to organize players an extra six months to make their case - the players will suddenly have lots of time to listen.

1/ As you sit home watching #COVID death counts spiral, please know the official @CDCgov guidance for coding COVID-related deaths is as follows: any death where the disease "caused or is assumed to have caused or contributed to death." Confirmed lab tests are not required...

1:06 PM  29%

NVSS National Vital Statistics System

COVID-19 Alert No. 2
March 24, 2020

New ICD code introduced for COVID-19 deaths
This email is to alert you that a newly-introduced ICD code has been implemented to accurately capture mortality data for Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) on death certificates.

Please read carefully and forward this email to the state statistical staff in your office who are involved in the preparation of mortality data, as well as others who may receive questions when the data are released.

What is the new code?
The new ICD code for Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) is U07.1, and below is how it will appear in formal tabular list format.

U07.1 COVID-19
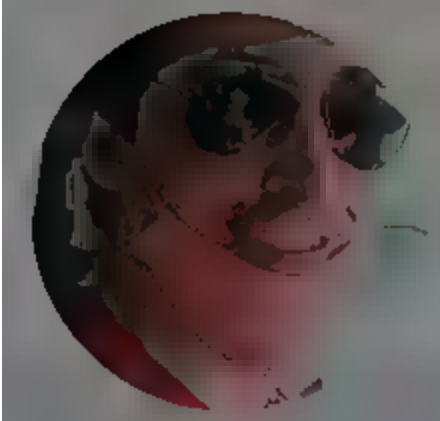
Excludes: Coronavirus infection, unspecified site (B34.2)
Severe acute respiratory syndrome [SARS], unspecified (U04.9)

The WHO has provided a second code, U07.2, for clinical or epidemiological diagnosis of COVID-19 where a laboratory confirmation is inconclusive or not available. Because laboratory test results are not typically reported on death certificates in the U.S., NCHS is not planning to implement U07.2 for mortality statistics.



When will it be implemented?
Immediately.

Will COVID-19 be the underlying cause?
The underlying cause depends upon what and where conditions are reported on the death certificate. However, the rules for coding and selection of the underlying cause of death are expected to result in COVID-19 being the underlying cause more often than not.

What happens if certifiers report terms other than the suggested terms?
If a death certificate reports coronavirus without identifying a specific strain or explicitly specifying that it is not COVID-19, NCHS will ask the states to follow up to verify whether or not the coronavirus was COVID-19.

It's increasingly clear the focus on widespread testing (as opposed to widespread ANTIBODY testing) is a sideshow designed to delay reopening and take the focus away from the empty hospitals. It's another version of wait two weeks.

So the poll is unscientific, but it's still striking - almost 1 in 5 people who've answered said they plan to leave lockdown states for free states as early as June 1. I don't think that's realistic for people with families - more of a wish - but it shows the depth of the anger.

> Serious poll question, please answer only if it applies to you: If you live in a state where lockdowns are likely to continue for some time, at what point would you plan on moving to a free state or at least renting a house there?

A good point about remote schooling: before 2010 or so it wouldn't even have been theoretically possible. The broadband capacity didn't exist.

So we would have had to keep schools open, and WE WOULD HAVE. To some extent, we're doing this because we can - the worst reason of all.

Nobody says COVID-19 is not real, that it can't tax hospitals or kill people, esp. if they are over 75 or have comorbidities. But right now the best CURRENT projection is for 61,000 US deaths. That was the 2017 flu season. Why have we shut the country?

Very good point about the media focus on outlier cases. They're presenting this infection as though it's a death sentence when of course we know that the majority of people recover at home.

Scientist wouldn't go into the ocean for $1 MILLION because of COVID.

Maybe she's a billionaire or something?

> Kim Prather – an atmospheric chemist at the Scripps Institution of Oceanography -- strongly believes that COVID-19 could enter the Pacific and transfer back into the air along the California coast ... possibly infecting anyone still daring to surf, swim or simply take a walk on the beach.
> Prather, who lives in San Diego, tells the L.A. Times ... "I wouldn't go in the water if you paid me $1 million right now."
> According to her research ... Prather's found the ocean contains all kinds of pathogens and constantly sprays these particles into the air, but the scary part is -- she believes the coronavirus is light enough to float through the air much farther than we think.
> Translation - social distancing doesn't work with the ocean. Kim drives the point home by saying ... "It's not going to kill you if you miss a few surfing sessions, but it could if you go out there and get in the wrong air."
> Prather's warning comes as the world's scientists are struggling to determine if COVID-19 can spread by more than just sneezes and coughs.
> Even Dr. Fauci's publicly hinting the virus might be more airborne than originally believed and suggesting it's a good idea for everyone to cover their faces.

In response to your query about children who are being adversely affected by his lock down I wanted to share my experience.

I am a pediatric physical therapist working (and a co-owner) in a clinic that provides physical, occupational and speech therapy services to children with various disabilities including cerebral palsy, autism spectrum disorder and various genetic and neurological diagnoses. We have been deemed an essential service and have kept our doors open after modifying the environment with enhanced sanitation and a "virtual" waiting room. However, the parents of our children are being told that their children are at very high risk to develop complications if their child contracts Covid-19. I have been unable to find any

The fact that these children are not receiving their therapies is doing them and their families harm. Children with CP who do not get therapy are at risk to develop musculoskeletal problems that could require surgery and they will lose functional abilities (like independent walking) as they lose range of motion and strength. Children with autism are becoming disregulated without their therapies resulting in increased behavior problems and creating chaos in their families as they struggle to understand the changes on their schedule and lack appropriate interventions.

This has been weighing on my mind and I appreciate you asking for input. This is a small

He is not a social butterfly, but he does enjoy time with school friends. He needs structure and predictability and that is clearly not happening now. I try to keep a certain structure to our days, but it's hard because I am working, my husband is working and his older brother has lots of schoolwork he also needs help with. The other thing Colin is struggling with is not understanding why he has to do schoolwork when he's not in school... there have been many meltdowns and I expect many more before all is said and done.

I have a senior daughter in high school and a son who has autism and is in his first year of tech school. Both are having issues with extremely high anxiety and now I'm seeing depression.

Their social and emotional needs are taking a serious hit. My son's special needs friends are not receiving needed therapies and are having regressions due to the isolation as well.

My daughter's senior year is a wash, but she's still expected to take an AP exam next month. The digital learning is a joke - the platforms crash every day.

Holy moly, Batman. This study out of Japan (where testing is uncommon) suggests the real infection rate there is 400 to 800 times (!) the reported rate (and, like many European cities, Kobe, Japan had a 3% antibody rate by early April). medrxiv.org/content/10.110 …

In turn, this raises real questions about whether some of the apparent gap between Japan and Europe is real or an artifact of media/government reporting (look for an epidemic in nursing homes, you find one; don't and you don't?). Very hard to know.

Fun fact from the @cdcgpv surveillance data: of 4,000 #COVID hospitalizations for which they provide detailed age data, 29 were in people under 18. That's not deaths or ICU visits - that's hospitalizations. The closing of the schools is nearly criminal at this point.

The fight over schools has become so focused on teachers that sometimes we forget schools are for kids.

I've been following your Covid coverage on twitter for a while and appreciate the counter balance you've been providing to the mainstream media. Please keep up the good work.

As the national narrative begins to shift from surging case rates to the impact of opening schools, I was wondering if you could take a look into the impact of school closures on special needs students. Today I saw first hand just how much school closures are impacting these kids psychologically and can't help but think that any extended attempt at distance learning is going to eradicate the achievement gap.

For background, my 6 year old son is autistic and is

Auckland isn't the capital and "increase restrictions" is a very polite way to say lockdown and run on grocery stores, but of course @nytimes has always taken a measured tone on #covid.

The New York Times @nytimes
New Zealand reported 4 new coronavirus cases on Tuesday after more than 100 days without any new infections. Prime Minister Jacinda Ardern said the capital Auckland would increase restrictions for 3 days. nyti.ms/30NcJwM

Form my desk, we have a pathogen with an R0 of ~3 that kills about 0.5-1.0% of people it infects. It's on the loose and mostly not controlled. Probably no more than 6% of TX has yet been infected, and large percentage of population is still susceptible. So I hope you are right.

And SE Texas, with a population about the size of New York City, has roughly 10% as many deaths - a death rate far lower than Spain, Holland or other countries that the good professor no doubt believes have "crushed the curve" (don't look now, it's uncrushing). Reality! It's fun.

I've been following you pretty closely since the pandemic began, and I appreciate all the work you've been doing. I'm a student at Notre Dame, and I thought you might appreciate hearing about some of the stuff they've instituted for students. There are signs - literally everywhere (bathrooms, soda machines, elevators, you name it) - trying to habituate you to the social experimentation being undertaken on college campuses (aka, "let's pretend to have a university but limit authentic face-to-face encounters as much as possible, as if these protocols were the point of coming to school in the first place"), but earlier today they unveiled an online "COVID-Related Incident Report" form that we're being encouraged to use. It's essentially a snitching hotline, a la the NBA bubble. I've attached

This parent has an interesting take on the idiotic #covid rules @uva and other big universities are requiring - she thinks it's theater to keep local communities happy. Not sure she's right but seemed worth sharing.

First, thank you so much for being a voice of reason and facts during this time. Here in CA we appreciate you!

I just wanted to give you a little more information about the UVA situation, which I think is very common among schools that want to open.

My oldest will be attending UVA this fall, so we have been following their communications closely. They delayed on-campus move-in dates two weeks. They claim it is because they wanted to ensure they had enough PPE and testing before students arrive. This might be partially true, since UVA requires testing for all students prior to arriving on campus, and have reworked the campus services and classrooms

Primary

However, it is clear to us from the tone of the Zoom meetings, emails and video messages from the University that the Charlottesville community leaders are putting significant pressure on the administration to keep kids home. To their credit, the administration seems committed to having students on campus and doing whatever it takes to accomplish this. Since many colleges in CA have not even attempted this (USC, the Claremont colleges, Berkeley etc), I am glad to see at least they are trying.

From what I can tell the school has had numerous meetings with town leaders and community [illegible] Charlottesville town hall. She brought about the University opening. She told me she hoped the city would respect the [illegible] and wear masks and follow rules because it is "their community" and they are very worried it will spark COVID rules. Confirmed my suspicions. And this must be happening in many small college towns all over the country. There is always an uneasy love/hate relationship between colleges and small towns, and COVID has rainmeted this extract up a notch. While I sympathize with residents to an extent, I don't think they truly appreciate the fact that with no students in town, [illegible] are [illegible] a town will bring significant $$$ to these towns (whose economies couldn't support even half of the residents without the university). These small town economies will [illegible] they keep the colleges closed. Seems Hand hygiene is a widely used intervention and has been shown to effectively reduce the transmission of gastrointestinal infections and respiratory infections (26). However, in our systematic review, updating the findings of Wong et al. (8), we did not find evidence of a

Addendum: The great part about that paper: Since Emerging Infectious Diseases is a peer-reviewed journal, and the paper was published on Feb. 6, it almost has to have been completed before the [redacted] epidemic began; it has no bias, it's just scientists reviewing evidence.

Seems clear that Katie Hill is the beneficiary of three different double standards, none of which I have the umm gumption to explain further. Bully for her, though - capitalizing on your own terrible choices is the American way!

Strong evidence here #SARSCoV2 can be transmitted via aerosols (essentially this means through tiny virus particles in room air rather than large droplets that infected people expel when they breathe or cough)... which would make masks even more useless.

Since #SARSCoV2 accounts for under 2% of all deaths worldwide this year, and the deaths heavily skew over 70, and many non-#covid deaths in poor countries are in very young people, a rough calculation suggests it has taken under 0.2% (1/500th) of life-years lost globally in 2020.

It was obviously speculative and I didn't say I had proof, but it seemed plausible to me and of course the cannabis lobby went nuts.

Back in the People's Democratic Republic of New Zealand, they're getting ready for a nice long lockdown (3 weeks is the new 3 days)... and making people enter "government-managed quarantine," which doesn't sound like forcibly separating them from their families at all.

I assumed this was a joke, but it's real: if you Google "socialism and racism," the top result you're offered will be "capitalism and racism." Big Tech gets more openly ideological by the day. And weird that one of the world's most profitable companies hates capitalism so much.

I don't understand the point of trying to drive panic with stories that are so misleading - and, frankly, so easily checked.

6/ Final point: the paper concludes the real bottleneck is in trained staff and "priority should focus not only on increasing [ventilators]... but on growing the number of trained professionals."

But I guess bashing the WH for not nationalizing ventilator production is more fun.

5/ And the move to continue to extend the lockdowns even in places that have seen no epidemic. The longer this continues, the harder it is to fix the economy and society. We have difficult choices to make, but the media panic and focus on outlier cases does not help.

6/ Finally - the choices we DO make cannot have as our primary goal zero new infections or deaths. That is an unrealistic standard and we don't apply it to influenza or TB or other diseases with high overall mortality. Our focus should be avoiding surges and health-system strain.

An average of 146,000 people per day have been tested for the coronavirus nationally so far this month, according to the COVID Tracking Project, which on Friday reported 3.6 million total tests across the country. To disabling restrictions, new estimates by researchers at Harvard University suggest that the United States cannot safely reopen unless it conducts more than three times the number of coronavirus tests it is currently administering over the next month.

Why can't the US media and (blue-state) policymakers keep two ideas in mind at once? [illegible] can be dangerous, especially to the elderly - but to respond by denying kids an education (and generally wrecking the economy and society with lockdowns of dubious value) is a mistake.

And there's a lot of evidence that many kids regress during the normal summer break - and that poor kids especially suffer, because their parent(s) may not have the time or resources to help them.

4/ High school seniors are being denied their only chance at graduation and prom:

> My other son who is in high school is a senior this year. He has a positive attitude but i know this hurts him. He is the goalie of the lacrosse team and had trained all year to help his team make it to playoffs. He hasn't complained but i know he wants to be able to have a few games and be with his friends in May to say goodbye to teachers and friends at school. Try to imagine if you were a senior. Some seniors have complained or commented their sadness under Governor Dewine's tweets but they get shot down or told they don't care about other ppl dying- that they are being selfish. Imagine your senior year ending like this. I wonder if Lt Gov Husted would feel differently if his son was a senior or his own football career as a senior in high school or college never happened?
> There should be no reason that high school spring athletes shouldn't play their sport in the last month in a half of the school year, especially with the lower virus numbers and

So the poll is unscientific, but it's still striking - almost 1 in 5 people who've answered said they plan to leave lockdown states for free states as early as June 1. I don't think that's realistic for people with families - more of a wish - but it shows the depth of the anger.

> Serious poll question, please answer only if it applies to you: If you live in a state where lockdowns are likely to continue for some time, at what point would you plan on moving to a free state or at least renting a house there?

"death toll would be enormous," White House coronavirus adviser Dr. Anthony Fauci warned on Thursday.

"If everyone contracted it, even with the relatively high percentage of people without symptoms … a lot of people are going to die," Fauci, the director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Disease, told actor Matthew McConaughey during a live discussion on Instagram.

public health measures, a degree of global herd immunity and a good vaccine, which I do hope and feel cautiously optimistic that we will get, I think when we put all three of those together, we will get control of this, whether it's this year or next year. I'm not certain," Fauci told the TB Alliance on July 22.

And I don't mock public health measures. People should wash their hands, sneeze into their elbows, and stay home if they're sick - the non-society destroying recommendations we've made for decades. You keep wearing that avatar mask, though! It tells me you're a good person.

After the last generation, New York and LA and SF are very arrogant (and if you own your own home you've made a lot of money and can still get out fast, even if you have to take a haircut). Chicago looks at Detroit and knows cities really can go into irreversible decline.

The @imperialcollege paper that @nature published today - the one claiming lockdowns saved 3 million lives in Europe - is a joke too. Three big clues (not including the fact it's from Imperial College and has Professor Pecker as a coauthor, which is dispositive by itself):

From Chicago. "I'm scared. I'm disgusted. I'm sad." In a follow-up note she said she plans to leave within a year.

to me

31 minutes ago Details

Good morning! I feel compelled to write to you after seeing your tweet about Chicago. I moved here seventeen years ago after grad school with nothing but hopes and dreams. I loved city life. I am in my forties and have never been married. My life in Chicago allowed me to go to the theatre every week, see independent films at wonderful theaters, eat at amazing restaurants, watch baseball and take advantage of everything city life offers. A few years ago, I was finally able to buy a condo in a beautiful neighborhood about a half mile west of Wrigley. I have a yard, a porch and am surrounded by tree lined streets and a strong sense of community. Chicago was my ride or die.

Primary

Inside. Bars and restaurants that have been open for decades are dropping like flies. Retail stores are boarded up. People have fled to their vacation homes in Wisconsin or Michigan. The COVID restrictions also took an emotional toll upon me. The loneliness was soul crushing. I am very social. While I am great at spending time alone, that is not the life for a single woman. I have lived alone for twenty years. Getting outside my condo was essential for my mental health. That hasn't happened in a normal sense since March. And it is not because I am afraid. I am not afraid at all of COVID. It's just that there isn't much to do AND the people are insane here about mask and social distancing. You should see my neighborhood FB group (Lakeview Uncensored). For months, it was only about taking pictures of people who weren't wearing masks. INSANE!

Then the looting happened in May. It devastated the city economically, even in my neighborhood north of downtown. It was horrific and necessary. I have never hated in my life. Ever. Until that night in May. Just what things began opening up after the May looting, Sunday night's looting happened. The city is gone. I am tired. I am scared. I am disgusted. I am sad.

Please know that everything you've seen about Chicago is true. And it should also be noted that I am NOT a republican. I was a hardcore liberal before

Step 1: Try to reopen schools.

Step 2: Because teachers unions are too powerful - I mean for student safety! - fail to reopen schools, provide "remote learning."

Step 3: Open "remote learning centers" for students. AT SCHOOLS.

Step 4: Orwell rises from dead, sees work is done.

Durham Public Schools will provide 'learning centers' for K-5 students who need supervision in remote learning

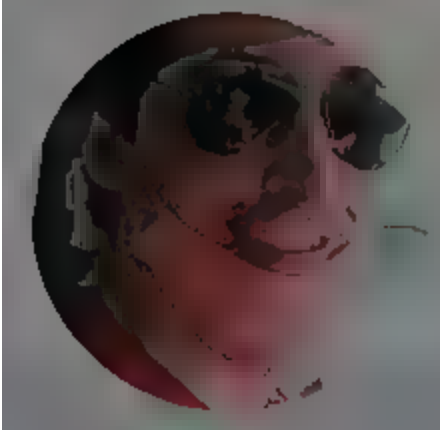
DURHAM, N.C. — Durham Public Schools will operate six "learning centers" at W.G. Pearson, Southwest and Eno Valley elementary schools, and at Carrington, Githens and Shepard middle schools, for students who need supervision while classrooms are closed & learning is managed online

Mubenga. "However, there are many families in Durham who need additional support during the school day. It will take a community effort to support each of these children, but DPS is doing its part."



The DPS Learning Centers will provide a safe space to complete online learning, meals and snacks, and social-emotional activities. Students will be assigned to small pods with daily wellness screenings, distribution and required use of facemasks, and planned circulation and seating of six feet social distancing

More from Chicago. What I hadn't understood is the raw fear in the city right now, the feeling violence can strike anywhere, any time. A city can thrive even with high crime (NYC, 1980s), if lawabiding, taxpaying homeowners and the central business district feel decently safe...

Alex,

Please leave my name off of this email if you decide to post, but I can echo all of the things being said about the city of Chicago. I lived in the suburbs until graduating college and then moved into the city and have been living in various locations throughout the city for the last 15 years. I finally bought a place about a mile north of Wrigley in 2018 in an up and coming area, and life was amazing.

I have loved and defended the city my whole life despite some flaws that every large city will have. The food, the sports, the concerts, the culture, the arts, the summers, the street fests, the friendliness of the people. We had it all. And in 5 months our mayor and our governor destroyed everything. They

As a "frontline ER doc," @cleavon_MD is no doubt aware that Arizona is far past its #covid peak by every measure: hospitalizations down 65% in a month, positive tests 75%, deaths 40% - and emergency room visits 50%. All with no lockdown. Why try to panic people, doctor?

Fun fact from the @cdcgpv surveillance data: of 4,000 #COVID hospitalizations for which they provide detailed age data, 29 were in people under 18. That's not deaths or ICU visits - that's hospitalizations. The closing of the schools is nearly criminal at this point.

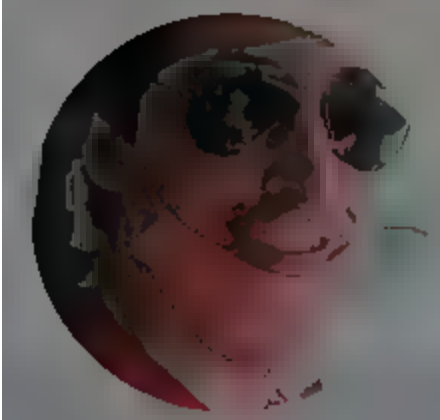
The refusal to let go of "social distancing" rules despite abundant evidence it's useless in stopping transmission makes it clear this is being used to set a precedent that people shall no longer be permitted to gather in large numbers.



Someone out there doesn't like crowds.

Answers to common questions about how schools are operating under restrictions due to the COVID-19 epidemic. Updated May 5th, 2020.

schools can then continue as normal, as neither the number of people nor the distance rules will apply to children of kindergarten and primary school age. This also applies to the leisure activities of children of kindergarten and primary school age, e.g. sports, youth and leisure activities and music education.

Students in upper secondary schools and universities may resume attending class in their school buildings, but there are limits to the number of people; no more than 50 individuals may be in the same area in those schools, and caution must be taken to maintain the 2-metre distance between individuals.

If the lockdown state school restrictions continue into next year, the US will be at a large and increasing gap in international education; it is ironic but probably not coincidental that big cities with troubled school systems may be hardest hit.

You keep writing about Berenson because you want people to find him, you can't publish or write about the things he does because you and all other journalists are censored by their editors, complaining about him sends people to him. Pretty smart.

Amazing reporting from @derspiegel on the great swine flu panic of 2009. Expect to see many of these quotations - about the "World Hysteria Organization," the worst-case predictions, the influence of Big Pharma - cut and pasted when reporters finally start digging on #Covid...

Does this mean that a very mild course of the pandemic was not even considered from the start? At any rate, efforts to downplay the risks were unwelcome, and the WHO made it clear that it preferred to base its decisions on a worst-case scenario. And this, of course, is why a certain kind of reporter loves it.

Maybe worry about reporting accurately. That's tough enough.

At the end of June, as the Sunbelt spike was accelerating, @statnews ran a piece on Fauci's speculating the US might hit 100,000 "cases" (positive tests) a day. We topped out at 78,000 on July 24. More interesting, though, are the comments from @mtosterholm of @cidrap...

And we avoided said crisis without ANY lockdown last month in the Sunbelt states - we closed some bars (or, more accurately, made them pretend to be restaurants).

They find almost no correlation between individual lockdown policies and ANY meaningful change in growth (to get around this little problem they create two catch-all categories called “other social distance” and “home isolation” which supposedly produce results.)

Anybody have an answer for why the number of OVERALL hospitalized patients in SE Texas remained ~flat even as the number of #Covid patients went from 1,000 to 3,000 and back? (Same trend for ICUs, same trend in AZ/FL.) Because it sure looks like a ton of with-not-from #SARSCoV2.

Then there's the question of T-cell protection, which implies that many more people have already been infected and recovered than even the antibody studies suggest. In other words, the evidence on the ground AND the theories line up, which is nice.

Look, everyone knows you can't spread or catch #SARSCoV2 while you are seated at a restaurant, only when you walk through it. You also can't catch it while drinking water or coffee (I find what I call the Starbucks Mask Exemption very helpful). This is science, people. SCIENCE!

Avoid the adjectives and you have the facts: even panic porn purveyor @scottgottliebmd admits lockdowns - not the virus itself or fear of it - caused most of the economic pain we've suffered (and this is only through April, when the real damage from the virus was highest).

Further, the authors make NO effort to compare the #COVID spread in countries that DID use lockdowns with those that didn't... they merely track the infection rate by day and assume any changes resulted from lockdowns (note to @ft - I got your tautology right here)...

Did you know that thousands (probably tens of thousands, based on the video) of South Koreans took to the streets of Seoul this weekend to protest the lockdown there?

Yeah, me neither.

Funny how some protests are amplified and others just vanish.

Let me make sure I have it right: protests against lockdowns are bad and should only be covered if they're mocked. Protests against the police are good and should be covered. But if protests against police become violent, they should no longer be covered.

Do I have it right?

Of note: "Increased hand washing was the first measure to be withdrawn, as some children developed severe eczema after few days, some even ending up with bloody hands."

Hey - that's good to hear. Sadly, the original tweet has now been liked 15,000 times, while the update stands at 525. Twitter does not always make it easy to get accurate information out or correct errors.

The UNC closure is so embarrassing, such a failure of leadership - a consequence of pretending this virus is more than infinitesimally dangerous to college students, rather than just admitting they're going to get it. This is where viral theater leads and why it must be stopped.

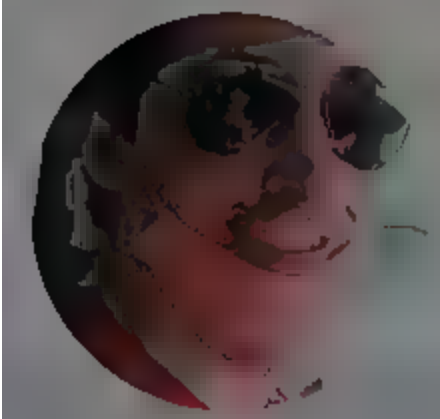
This fun paper on masks just came out in @jamainternalmed; researchers compared N95s and found even expired ones could block all but 3% of small particles. Good news.



That's not the fun part, tho. They also checked surgical masks - and found those allowed in 62% of particles...

Not that anyone needed any more evidence of the uselessness of masks (except, maybe, for properly fitted N95s in hospital settings)... but it's nice to have it.

Btw - are you as shocked as I am these findings weren't widely publicized?

Have you herd of T-cell immunity for #SARSCoV2?

Yeah, turns out it's real and you don't even need to show #covid symptoms to have it.

Don't take my word. This is from the dummies @karolinskainst, which hands out the Nobel Prize in Medicine.

Today's #David update:

Masks don't work.
Lockdowns don't work.
Kids and young adults are at roughly zero risk.
Adults under 50 are at tiny risk.
Adults under 75 (80?) who aren't already at death's door are at very low risk.
Many people already have immunity.

PANIC FOREVER!

Yep, now divide by 10 to 20 to get true infection fatality rate, which is coming in overall at 0.1% to 0.2%, just like Florida.

Surprising - or not - how many states have zero deaths in anyone under 18. (California is now up to one.)

Last week, a @cdcgov survey found that 1 in 4 young adults had seriously considered suicide during June.

Here's what that looks like on the front lines of crisis counseling. It's clear that if schools stay closed much longer some kids will just break.

I work at a crisis center as a suicide / crisis counselor. Ever since the lockdown, it's gotten worse and worse. In March, 20-30 percent of the chatters and callers we take cited the lockdown. By mid to late April every chat and call I would take would either site to lock down as the primary reason for suicidal ideation. If not the primary, than its a major contributing issue.

Those who were doing terrible before the lockdown are now high risk. Those who were never at risk are calling in for the first time their lives. It's so so so much worse than anyone would ever think.

The reasons for them using the service vary from those who just can't handle the social isolation to a kid who came out to his family and now has to spend Contract tracing in New York. NOTE: this couple does not have #Covid or even an exposure. They are being put through this only because they traveled to a state on NY's quarantine list.

The writer has a good attitude, which makes this seem way funnier and less serious than it is.

On to the contact tracing. My wife and I went to a wedding in nd then after that flew into to scope out a new home for our tiny house. We are those weirdos that opted to put our house on a trailer so we can move when the state gets stupid. Comrade Cuomo has accelerated our search for a new landing spot and his begging for our tax dollars isn't working.

Because we filled out the NYS forms we started our Quarantine today. My wife and I have different last names so we have 2 different folks working our QT adventures. I got my first call at 10 am and the gentleman was pretty nice overall. He even joked that Cuomo was an idiot, that might have been defensive as I was still low on coffee and a bit surly

Great thread here. When they first calculated the #sarscov2 death rate, @neil_ferguson and the other geniuses behind this mess didn't bother to consider they were using a sample totally unlike the average Wuhan resident.

And the gap would widen as the number of infected but asymptomatic passengers increased.

In other words, the less dangerous the virus, the further off their infection fatality estimates would be. (At this point, they appear to be off by a factor of 3 to 5.)

Alas, @nytimes's foray into reality didn't last. Here they are with an article about how people are drinking bleach (that rumor went away in APRIL) and more importantly won't wear masks because of online "rumors." You know, from dangerous sources of misinformation like @cdcgov...

Doctors say patients regularly treat people more inclined to believe what they read on Facebook than what medical professionals tells them. The skeptics, they say, have undermined efforts to get people to wear masks and undercut belief that the coronavirus outbreak is overblown. Meantime, at the old alma mater: forced isolation for students who test positive; assigned seats in classrooms to simplify contact-tracing; mask shaming and snitching; mandatory daily health checks; "passes" to walk around campus. @NotreDame sounds like a lot of fun this year!

Hello Mr. Berenson,

I am a senior at the University of Notre Dame who is living off campus. I read the post that you shared from one of my peers a few days ago and thought I might share my experience with you as well. If you decide to share this email with anyone, I just ask that you remove my name as well, as I fear I may be reprimanded by the University and/or harassed by my peers if they knew how I really felt about this topic of "debate". Thanks!

Before coming to campus, all students were mandated to take a COVID-19 nasal swab test (swabbing just inside of the nostril, not the long stick) and send it back to the lab. Many students wondered why ND only conducted one round of testing, as most students travel from all over the country (or

And no, it's not just Notre Dame - most schools have some form of this (@stanford demands advance notice for anyone leaving Northern California). How long will people put up with paying $25,000-$75,000 a year to be treated this way? Is the credential worth that much?

I'm not sure what's more amazing: How quickly the truth became obvious to those of us who were paying attention... or the fact that those who wouldn't admit it then have dug in their heels for four-plus months and show no signs of accepting reality.

Not a random sample but these antibody numbers are still stunningly high - based on antibodies alone, up to 1 in 4 people in Florida may have been infected and recovered (and this does not account for T-cell immunity).

Looks like a herd of immunity unicorns may have arrived!

Further, the authors make NO effort to compare the [illegible] spread in countries that DID use lockdowns with those that didn't... they merely track the infection rate by day and assume any changes resulted from lockdowns (note to [illegible] - I got your tautology right here)...

But without comparing countries that DIDN'T lock down to those that did, they have no way of knowing if the decrease from the early rapid spread simple represents the natural and normal track of the virus...

And further, their own analysis shows that lockdowns reduced the speed of spread by less than 40% everywhere (about 30% in the US) - meaning spread was still very rapid post-lockdown. Even worse, when they look at individual policies in the United States...

The stunning decline in Florida COVID hospitalizations continues - down almost half from peak. As with Arizona/Texas, little change in overall hospital use on either the way up or down.

Maybe one day some smart, non-partisan epidemiologists/physicians will try to figure out why.

If anyone can direct me to the details of @neil_ferguson's financial arrangements with pharma, the Gates Foundation, etc, I'd be most grateful.

Here's a sweet little $3 million grant from Gates a few years back. Looking for non-public stuff too, though.

Spoiler alert, @natesilver538: fear of #sarscov2 is not why people are leaving New York City. The risks these days come in larger calibers. And even the fact that Mayor Bill (for once) has the right instincts on schools isn't going to be enough to get them open.

If NY doesn't open schools then there is no hope for any city until after the election. They literally 'flattened' the curve (by accident, of course), yet if the union still won't allow school to happen then do we need any more proof it has nothing to do with the virus?

Why would people want to take a rushed vaccine for a virus that poses no significant danger to them (as is the case for practically everyone under 50, or under 70 in decent health)?

Totally untrue. And the recent growth in cases in Europe has made little or no difference to school reopenings there. If anything the major difference since March is our awareness that #sarscov2 is less dangerous - and far less dangerous to kids - than we thought.

> Justin Wolfers @JustinWolfers

Meanwhile, in the category of real problems, this email from a divorced dad who can't agree with his wife about whether their kids (they have joint custody) should go to school. What a mess. Only the lawyers win.

Thanks #Covid! Thanks teachers' unions!

Alex- I'm involved in an interesting case with how our school district is returning to school.

I am a father of a 7 and 8yr old who have attended public school since Kindergarten and I'm also divorced with 50/50 physical and decision making custody of both my children.

Our district has given families two options for return to school. 1 option is full time in person (yay!) and the other option is a full time virtual learning academy which is not supported by our local school district.

Here is the problem, my ex-wife does not want our kids to return to in-person school, but I do. I've contacted our principal and my attorney and no one

Hey @nitzikm, now that Arizona #covid hospitalizations are 1/4 what they were in mid-July, any plans to update this disgusting piece of panic porn with the reality that NO CARE WAS EVER RATIONED - and in fact ICUs statewide never reached capacity and ventilators never got close?

Arizona's rules for rationing healthcare in the COVID-19 pandemic should terrify you

You may think that the coronavirus and COVID-19, the disease it causes, are frightening enough. But Arizona has just activated a rulebook for rationing hospital care that is truly terrifying.

In brief, the rules allow hospitals to deny critical healthcare resources such as ventilators to patients based on medical judgments about their likelihood of living even five more years despite surviving COVID-19.

Lol look at you thinking Team Apocalypse cares about comparator groups.

Teachers have jobs to do. And like all jobs that cannot be performed exclusively at home, those jobs carry a small risk of #sarscov2 infection and a tiny risk of serious illness (this has always also been true of influenza, but no one ever cared). DO YOUR JOB. Or find another.

For example, on April 15, she tweeted that ending them would cause #SarsCov2 to spread "to an extent that will make our current infection & death rate laughable." Obviously, what's happened in Georgia and much of Europe make that statement ridiculous. So what's her argument now?

While the hysterics on Team Apocalypse still scream "WAIT TWO WEEKS," the more sophisticated now have a different argument: "There's so much we don't know" (and thus, implicitly, we can't take any chances).

Except: four months into this epidemic, there's so much we do know...

Dr. Ranney writes we don't know the infection fatality rate, but @CDCgov pegged it this week at about 0.25% - about 1 in 400 people. (A reasonable range is 0.15% to 0.4%.)

Arguably even more importantly, we know exactly WHO dies from #sarscov2, a fact Dr. Ranney never mentions.

In other words, this is really a paper about China (as the authors basically admit - they say on page 2 that they lack "sufficient data" for detailed estimates of changes over time in any other country).

And further, their own analysis shows that lockdowns reduced the speed of spread by less than 40% everywhere (about 30% in the US) - meaning spread was still very rapid post-lockdown. Even worse, when they look at individual policies in the United States...

From a senior faculty member at a Midwestern university: he thinks his school always planned to reopen, get tuition checks, and then close again. I always say it is impossible to be too cynical, but even I'm surprised by this game.

> At any rate, I write to offer something of a knowledgeable perspective on what is happening now and likely to occur in the coming days and weeks at colleges and universities in the U.S. I am a full professor and department head at an HBCU in the midwest. After we "pulled the plug" and put everything on line last fall, along with everyone else, we (I and my fellow mid-level administrators) started trying, at least, to prepare to return to in person classes this fall. From the beginning, it was rather apparent that upper-management (chancellor, provost, deans) were reluctant to commit to any plans at all. They formed little star chambers, if you will, and shared nothing about their discussions with the campus at large. All we got, in terms of direction, was "Plan on in person."

Based on the comments I'm the only one who didn't see this coming. The level of cynicism, disgust, and even anger at academia in this country is stunning. Btw here is the final screenshot from the email:

> I'm still only communicating with 90% of them exclusively via Zoom, email, and phone/text. Haven't actually laid eyes on them since March. And classes are supposed to start in person on Monday. We'll see.
> I'm sure there are certain things about my situation that are idiosyncratic, but I just have a feeling that a similar dynamic is playing out all over the country. And I thought you might not have received such testimony. I wrote to you this way because there have already been instances where faculty have Btw: if the college administrators really did plan the open/close game all along, the aggrieved tone of their letters to students - and the absurdly harsh discipline for off-campus parties - makes far more sense. It's a form of gaslighting; I'm hurting you because you made me.

Here's a lead-pipe lock prediction: within weeks the parties at colleges will go underground and become more dangerous - we will see lots of alcohol poisonings, drug overdoses, and sexual assaults. In pretending at the dangers of #Covid colleges are feeding cynicism and nihilism.

Meanwhile this faculty member says his peers and not the administrators are to blame... "it is more convenient not to commute to campus every day."

> I read your thread this morning on universities pulling a bait-and-switch with students and families to get tuition with no intention of opening in-person.
> From my perspective (faculty at a research university in the midwest), it did not go exactly like that, but the effect was the same. The admin planned to re-open with as much in-person instruction as they could, but faculty (tenured and tenure-track) pushed back and basically were unwilling to come to campus this fall. The big mistake of the admin was making remote teaching an option for all faculty - I chose in-person but only 3 / 50 in my department did. So hybrid became online for almost all students. A lot of the faculty who chose to teach online did so not because they are concerned for their health but rather that it is

Nice long-haul #covid summary here:

"She tested negative for Covid, but is convinced it was a faulty test...

A doctor even asked her if it was possible she had anxiety. She was furious he even suggested it. But here's the thing - she has diagnosed anxiety and takes medication."

Thank you again for persistently pursuing the truth. You have pulled me out of a downward spiral on more than a few occasions with your tweets. Your thread on long haul covid ran true.

I have a very good friend who is absolutely convinced she contracted covid at the beginning of April. She never had a fever, just achy, tired, and heavy pressure on her chest. She tested negative for covid, but is convinced it was a faulty test. She later tested negative for antibodies, but just assumes she is one of those individuals who did not make [illegible] and chest x-rays that did not show anything unusual. At one point a doctor even asked her if it was possible she had anxiety. She was furious he even suggested it. But here it the thing - she has diagnosed anxiety and takes medication for it. She has always struggled with life being overwhelming. If you look up symptoms of anxiety those are the exact symptoms she describes for covid. But she can't see it at all. I talked to her today and she said she had to go because her chest felt heavy - five months later! She still thinks she got covid by going to the grocery store without a mask. She had been hiding out prior to this.

You will wait a long time for that data. Meantime, expect lots of cellular level mechanistic theorizing, symptom checklists (are you SURE your eyes don't hurt?), and expensive drugs with a painkiller/psychiatric flavor. Ketamine for long Covid: you heard it here first.

Wonder how quickly this trend will spread: students pledging NOT to get tested if they believe they may have #Covid so they don't have to rat on their friends.

AA mail.google.com

Primary

Dear Alex, my daughter is a sophomore and just returned to her college in Texas. They aren't forcing testing but do have a contract about not gathering in groups, have a "leper dorm" for those who test positive, mandatory contact tracing etc.
She told me she and her friends made a pact- if they show symptoms they WILL NOT get tested. They will isolate in their rooms to recover and not go to class or intentionally expose anyone. She said this no testing pact is a movement at her college and other colleges. They do not want to be put in a position of ratting out classmates they might have had "illegal" contact with.

The worst college story yet. “Trapped in Sorority House” sounds like a joke (or a movie made in Chatsworth), but it’s real. And this parent is right: what exactly DOES “law enforcement would have to be involved” if students try to leave mean?

Trapped in Sorority House

Primary

Dear Alex,

The issues college kids are facing is unreal. My daughter attends a public university in a northern midwest state (one typically thought of as conservative, ironically). She is a sophomore and living in her sorority house this year. ONE girl SAID she tested positive (no proof provided to the sorority leadership) and now the entire house of nearly 100 residents is being forced into quarantine for 2 weeks. They are not permitted to go to class or work. The members are furious but don't know what to do.

My daughter and a few others are demanding more answers. They want to go home to "quarantine" and want to get out of their housing contracts. When girls asked what would happen if they left the house without permission, they were told "law enforcement would have to be involved." What does that even mean??

College students are smart. They are going to stop testing for fear of being held against their will over and over. They will find other places to live that are not on campus and not run by scared leadership. They are growing tired and angry as more and more of their experiences are being altered because of a

This little scandal - wherein the Kansas Dept. of Health and Environment manipulated how it presented data to pretend masks were effective when the reverse is true - deserves more attention. Not that anyone needs more evidence that masks are useless, but here it is.

Data obtained in an Oper Records request from the Kansas Department of Health and Environment shows KDHE didn't 'just' manipulate data to justify a mask mandate; they also hid data showing that counties with mask mandates had a large increase in cases before tapering off.

Last week, KDHE presented a chart that appeared to show that counties with a mask people in the mandate counties jumped from 9.1 per day to 25.3 per day. The 7-day rolling average then dropped to 19.7 on July 13, which KDHE Secretary Dr. Lee Norman would have Kansans believe is solely attributable to a mask mandate. Not wearing a mask, mind you; a mask mandate.

The not at all credulous @eayong209 did manage to choke out an actual fact in this piece in @theatlantic - 2/3s (!) of people being treated (yes, treated) for "long-haul" ro at a leading clinic do NOT HAVE A POSITIVE ANTIBODY TEST.

contrast, Put

that recognize the new coronavirus, and that these molecules endure for months. Their presence should confirm whether a long-hauler was indeed infected. But there's a catch: Most existing antibody studies focused on either hospitalized patients or those with mild symptoms and swift recoveries. By contrast, Putrino told me that in his survey of 1,400 long-haulers, two-thirds of those who have had antibody tests got negative results, even though their symptoms were consistent with COVID-19. Nichols, for example, tested negative

I have celiac disease, treatable only by zero gluten diet. Real disease, objectively diagnosed, not mere "intolerance," whatever that is. Personally, I don't understand why people would avoid gluten unless they have to.

schools can then continue as normal, as neither the number of people nor the distance rules will apply to children of kindergarten and primary school age. This also applies to the leisure activities of children of kindergarten and primary school age, e.g. sports, youth and leisure activities and music education.

Students in upper secondary schools and universities may resume attending class in their school buildings, but there are limits to the number of people; no more than 50 individuals may be in the same area in those schools, and caution must be taken to maintain the 2-metre distance between individuals.

If the lockdown state school restrictions continue into next year, the US will be at a large and increasing gap in international education; it is ironic but probably not coincidental that big cities with troubled school systems may be hardest hit.

THEY CENSORED IT! It is based entirely on published government data and scientific papers. It doesn't say coronavirus isn't real or doesn't kill people (in fact, the worst-case death toll is likely to be striking to people). And Amazon won't run it.

Wondering what @cdcgov really thinks about masks? Their guidance on quarantining after exposure to someone with #covid explicitly states whether the infected OR exposed person wore masks doesn't matter.

My mask protects no one. So does yours. Thanks for clearing that up, CDC!

Add Italy to the European countries promising NEVER to lockdown again (even as its curve, umm, unflattens). As with schools, the US - more specifically Democrat politicians and their allies in the media and academia - are the international outliers.

Washington state to send ventilators

April 5, 2020

Story

Gov. Jay Inslee today, recognizing the dire situation in other states, announced the state of Washington will return more than 400 ventilators received from the Strategic National Stockpile to the SNS inventory to help states facing higher numbers of COVID-19 cases.

"These ventilators are going to New York and others states hardest hit by this virus," Inslee said. "I've said many times over the last few weeks, we are in this together. This should guide all of our actions at an individual and state level in the coming days and weeks."

And right on schedule #COVID deaths have plunged in Arizona - down 50% from peak - and Florida - down 30% in a week (7-day moving average, no cheating). Nationally the second driblet peaked three weeks ago and we're now down 15%.

The reality is if the media hadn't screamed for two months about the impending apocalypse in the Sunbelt it is unlikely anyone outside of somewhat stressed hospital staff would even have noticed.

Hey, @alexismadrigal, now that your prediction in @theatlantic the Sunbelt states might have 550,000 #Covid deaths has proven off in a month by 10x (more, really, but who's counting), any chance you'll walk the little people through what went right (for the world, if not you)?

"That was not my prediction..." Sure. Screenshotted: the article's not-at-all alarmist headline and some of its greatest hits - the inevitable reference to "refrigerated morgue trucks," the logic that 550,000 deaths was no more "unthinkable" than the then-current figure.

Astonishing. 18,000+ replies to the poll, and almost 90% of people don't know one person who has died of #Covid. Only 4% know more than one. Only 2% know more than one under 75.

Not a random sample but I'll bet it's fairly representative (esp. given the answers to question 3).

34,000 responses and the numbers did not change after the first couple of thousand (which to me suggests a strong poll). 7 out of 8 Americans know no one who has died from #Covid. 24 out of 25 know only one person or no one. 49 out of 50 know only one person or no one under 75.

In response to my comment about Trump's hidden support.

I think this is very true, especially for Democrats who are furious about the lockdowns and how the party has politicized school openings (a small group, but it exists - I hear from them). Those folks truly feel trapped.

Not every child has been infected with #Covid, so the actual IFR for kids will be higher. If children are infected at rates similar to adults, it likely is between 1 in 100,000 to 1 in 200,000 (this assumes deaths aren't overcoded in kids; there's some evidence they have been).

He is a misogynistic pig who (as a dad with a beautifu year old daughter) treats women (and indeed others) with incredible disrespect. However, the fact that Dems are using Covid as their platform is one of the worst things I have seen. Outwardly politicizing what we should all want to "fight" together is reprehensible at best. In other words, this is really a paper about China (as the authors basically admit - they say on page 2 that they lack "sufficient data" for detailed estimates of changes over time in any other country).

Further, the authors make NO effort to compare the [illegible] spread in countries that DID use lockdowns with those that didn't... they merely track the infection rate by day and assume any changes resulted from lockdowns (note to [illegible] - I got your tautology right here)...

But without comparing countries that DIDN'T lock down to those that did, they have no way of knowing if the decrease from the early rapid spread simple represents the natural and normal track of the virus...

And further, their own analysis shows that lockdowns reduced the speed of spread by less than 40% everywhere (about 30% in the US) - meaning spread was still very rapid post-lockdown. Even worse, when they look at individual policies in the United States...

So @uoregon is "pivoting" from real education this fall. After tuition's paid, of course.

Bonus: one excuse is "the impact on UO employees of K-12 school districts' plans to teach online."

Translation: Public schools won't do their jobs, why should we?

And tonight's winner for higher education insanity goes to @uva: each student "must maintain a distance of 6 feet AT ALL TIMES FROM ALL OTHER PEOPLE."

Or face immediate semester-long suspension "at a minimum."

They said it, not me.

> 1. No gatherings of more than 15 people—on or off Grounds, inside or outside.
> 2. You must wear a mask (that covers your mouth and nose) on and off Grounds whenever you are not in your private residence. This includes the common spaces in your residence halls, apartments, etc.
> 3. You must maintain a distance of 6 feet at all times from all other people.
> As Dean Groves indicates, these rules will be strictly enforced, and any failure to follow them will likely result in immediate suspension from the University for the semester (at a minimum). There will be no warnings—the stakes are too high.
> These are difficult times for all of us. We trust you to do the right thing. Thank you for living in accordance with the rules of the University and for your shared commitment to each other. We will get through this together.

How does that rule even work in reality? Technically, if you and the person across the hall open your doors at the same time, you've both broken it and should be immediately suspended, no appeal.

CORRECTION: @uoregon says tuition is not due until Oct. 1, so students do have the choice to leave this term without financial penalty. (Of course, it is now Aug. 26, months after the university first announced its plans; readers can judge themselves if that option is realistic.)

Even by @cnn standards, this effort to blame the Sturgis rally for "superspreading" #sarscov2 is humiliating.

460,000+ went to Sturgis for up to 10 days.

Almost two weeks later, 70 infections are reported.

That's far LOWER than the background US rate.

4/ I don't even know how pollsters could model for this - it's so personal, and people may not even be aware of it until its happening. (Setting up a fake voting booth seems unlikely.) But I wonder if this is the real reason vote-by-mail hurts Trump.

It is essential to note that the mechanisms of person-to-person transmission in the community have not been fully determined. Controversy remains over the role of transmission through fine-particle aerosols (4, 25). Transmission by indirect contact requires transfer of viable virus from respiratory mucosa onto hands and other surfaces, survival on those surfaces, and successful inoculation into the respiratory mucosa of another person. 3/ At 2% of reported cases (the actual IFR is far lower, of course), France could see 100+ deaths a day in a few weeks. This would be a fraction of the deaths it suffered this spring, but it would be equivalent to 500+ daily deaths in the US...

4/ And we should all hope the US will trend toward that level soon - deaths are already down ~20% from the early August peak and under 1,000 a day. In any case, the Team Apocalypse argument that Europe had some magical solution is about to get much more difficult.

5/ Two quick addenda: I use the rolling seven-day average for US daily deaths - it's more accurate because it smooths out weekends. And I said both "couple of weeks" and "few weeks" - "few weeks" is much more likely.

Has anyone else noticed that the Team Apocalypse shrieking for a second (and harder!) lockdown has basically ended? I guess at some point the reality of charts like this became too embarrassing to ignore. But it was close. Remember this insanity from @aslavitt? Only a month ago.

didn't do this in Mar-April and let's chalk it up to faulty instructions. But we know better now.
2. Keep the bars & restaurants & churches & transit closed. All hot spots.
3. Prohibit interstate travel10/

Andy Slavitt @ @ASl... 7/26/20
4. Prohibit travel into the country (no one will let us into their country so that shouldn't be hard).
5. Have hotels set up to allow people with symptoms to isolate from their families at no cost.

None of this means Trump will win, of course - he is going to have to convince people who genuinely despise him on a personal level to vote for him if he's going to win, no easy feat - but it means he CAN win.

We identified only 2 RCTs on environmental cleaning and no RCTs on cough etiquette.

Hand hygiene is a widely used intervention and has been shown to effectively reduce the transmission of gastrointestinal infections and respiratory infections (26). However, in our systematic review, updating the findings of Wong et al. (8), we did not find evidence of a persons in the general community to reduce their susceptibility (Figure 4). However, as with hand hygiene, face masks might be able to reduce the transmission of other infections and therefore have value in an influenza pandemic when healthcare resources are stretched.

It is essential to note that the mechanisms of person-to-person transmission in the community have not been fully determined. Controversy remains over the role of transmission through fine-particle aerosols (4, 25). Transmission by indirect contact requires transfer of viable virus from respiratory mucosa onto hands and other surfaces, survival on those surfaces, and successful inoculation into the respiratory mucosa of another person. In other words, this is really a paper about China (as the authors basically admit - they say on page 2 that they lack "sufficient data" for detailed estimates of changes over time in any other country).

Anyone actually spending time in NYC can sense the economic devastation. Empty apartments, massive amounts of retail space to rent. Upper East and Upper West a little better, but Midtown is a desert. Most companies only coming back in January. This will be crushing.

Hand hygiene is a widely used intervention and has been shown to effectively reduce the transmission of gastrointestinal infections and respiratory infections (26). However, in our systematic review, updating the findings of Wong et al. (8), we did not find evidence of a

The casual stupidities and cruelties of the lockdowns never end; a woman denied the chance to see her 86-year-old father in the hospital. "What kind of society does this?"

I don't know.

Hi Alex,

It's unlikely that you will ever read this, but as I have been following you since the start of this panic, it is making me feel better just to type this note.

My father is 86 years old and loaded with cancer. He was admitted to the hospital (in Florida) on Friday a.m. No one is allowed in to see him, not even my mother, with whom he shared a bed until the morning he was admitted and to whom he has been married to for almost 61 years (on Oct 10th they will celebrate 61 years together). This is so inhumane. I can't get over it and feel sick to my stomach. I called the

Why is it that no one is asking the question, if masks work, then why can't we visit our sick loved ones in the hospital? It seems that if masks are effective, my mother, at a minimum, should be allowed to see her husband. This needs to stop. I don't know what to do any more.....

What kind of society does this to the elderly? What have we become? I never wear a mask unless someone mandates it of me, but I would put on full body armor to see my father.

Thanks for keeping up the fight.

Regards,
Ellen Thibodeau

If the elite media were at all interested in the truth on this every good investigative reporter would be told to dive into what really happened with testing, death counts, and ventilator/nursing home deaths.

This is shaping up as the biggest medico-political clusterfuck ever.

COVID-19 Alert No. 2
March 24, 2020

New ICD code introduced for COVID-19 deaths
This email is to alert you that a newly-introduced ICD code has been implemented to accurately capture mortality data for Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) on death certificates.

Please read carefully and forward this email to the state statistical staff in your office who are involved in the preparation of mortality data, as well as others who may receive questions when the data are released.

What is the new code?
The new ICD code for Coronavirus Disease 2019 (COVID-19) is U07.1, and below is how it will appear in formal tabular list format.

U07.1 COVID-19
Excludes: Coronavirus infection, unspecified site (B34.2)
Severe acute respiratory syndrome [SARS], unspecified (U04.9)

The WHO has provided a second code, U07.2, for clinical or epidemiological diagnosis of COVID-19 where a laboratory confirmation is inconclusive or not available. Because laboratory test results are not typically reported on death certificates in the U.S., NCHS is not planning to implement U07.2 for mortality statistics.

When will it be implemented?
Immediately.

Will COVID-19 be the underlying cause?
The underlying cause depends upon what and where conditions are reported on the death certificate. However, the rules for coding and selection of the underlying cause of death are expected to result in COVID-19 being the underlying cause more often than not.

What happens if certifiers report terms other than the suggested terms?
If a death certificate reports coronavirus without identifying a specific strain or explicitly specifying that it is not COVID-19, NCHS will ask the states to follow up to verify whether or not the coronavirus was COVID-19.

5/ And the move to continue to extend the lockdowns even in places that have seen no epidemic. The longer this continues, the harder it is to fix the economy and society. We have difficult choices to make, but the media panic and focus on outlier cases does not help.

6/ Finally - the choices we DO make cannot have as our primary goal zero new infections or deaths. That is an unrealistic standard and we don't apply it to influenza or TB or other diseases with high overall mortality. Our focus should be avoiding surges and health-system strain.

Washington State shuts down its COVID field hospital. Total patient count: Zero. The move is ""aimed at helping another state with a more significant need..." Good luck with that. kjow.org/stories/washin ...

field hospital deployed to CenturyLink Field Event Center to the U.S. Department of Defense.

The 250-bed facility, for which setup began on March 30, was intended to help Washington state's health care system tend to non Covid-19 patients in the event of a hospital surge.

But just three days after announcing the facility was ready to receive patients, officials say they're returning the hospital to the federal government.

The action is aimed at helping another state with a more significant need for hospital capacity at this time, according to the Governor's Office. The facility did not see any patients during the time it was slated to operate in Seattle.

> My other son who is in high school is a senior this year. He has a positive attitude but i know this hurts him. He is the goalie of the lacrosse team and had trained all year to help his team make it to playoffs. He hasn't complained but i know he wants to be able to have a few games and be with his friends in May to say goodbye to teachers and friends at school. Try to imagine if you were a senior. Some seniors have complained or commented their sadness under Governor Dewine's tweets but they get shot down or told they don't care about other ppl dying- that they are being selfish. Imagine your senior year ending like this. I wonder if Lt Gov Husted would feel differently if his son was a senior or his own football career as a senior in high school or college never happened?

Although these measures have mechanistic support based on our knowledge of how influenza is transmitted from person to person, randomized trials of hand hygiene and face masks have not demonstrated protection against laboratory-confirmed influenza, with 1 exception (18). We identified only 2 RCTs on environmental cleaning and no RCTs on cough etiquette.

Hand hygiene is a widely used intervention and has been shown to effectively reduce the transmission of gastrointestinal infections and respiratory infections (26). However, in our systematic review, updating the findings of Wong et al. (8), we did not find evidence of a persons in the general community to reduce their susceptibility (Figure 4). However, as with hand hygiene, face masks might be able to reduce the transmission of other infections and therefore have value in an influenza pandemic when healthcare resources are stretched.

It is essential to note that the mechanisms of person-to-person transmission in the community have not been fully determined. Controversy remains over the role of transmission through fine-particle aerosols (4, 25). Transmission by indirect contact requires transfer of viable virus from respiratory mucosa onto hands and other surfaces, survival on those surfaces, and successful inoculation into the respiratory mucosa of another person. Someone has looked at how ventilators damage lungs (notice you never hear about "ground glass opacity" anymore?). Someone knows why we never ran national randomized antibody tests. Someone has looked at the real comorbidities in deaths under 50.

And soon enough, all of us will.

persons in the general community to reduce their susceptibility (Figure 4). However, as with hand hygiene, face masks might be able to reduce the transmission of other infections and therefore have value in an influenza pandemic when healthcare resources are stretched.

It is essential to note that the mechanisms of person-to-person transmission in the community have not been fully determined. Controversy remains over the role of transmission through fine-particle aerosols (4, 25). Transmission by indirect contact requires transfer of viable virus from respiratory mucosa onto hands and other surfaces, survival on those surfaces, and successful inoculation into the respiratory mucosa of another person. 2/ A better way to use the data may be to TAKE OUT causes clearly unrelated to #sarscov2. I'd include Alzheimer's, sepsis, dementia, cancer, and unintentional injury. (Let's be conservative and leave off kidney failure, diabetes, obesity, and strokes.)

Alex Berenson ✓ @AlexBerenson · Aug 30
3/ The other advantage of leaving off those conditions is that there is significant overlap in, say, diabetes and obesity (and the CDC reports the average COVID death certificate included 2.6 other conditions). That's less likely for the conditions I included...

4/ So, okay, the five conditions on my list were on about 50,000 certificates (assuming no double counting). The accidental deaths and poisonings alone were 5,000.

Ohh. Makes total sense. Also, she needs rose petals scattered before her.

I don't want to shame these people. But if the nonsense that is long-haul #covid becomes entrenched, we will all lose.

Ok mommas, I need a little miracle! A good friend of mine is a medical worker in nyc and got covid. His fiancé did as well, and she's now a "long-hauler" with some unusual symptoms. She literally can't leave the apt unless the temp is less than 70 degrees😎 (she gets a bad reaction from heat). They have delayed their wedding but he's trying to do some special nyc things to cheer her up. Tonight the temp was low enough, with Uber AC he was able to take her to the Brooklyn bridge for a few minutes around midnight. Does anyone have any other ideas, especially late evening? Any way to do dining? A contact so she could visit a museum after hours? I'd love to cheer her up and thank him for his service, please message me if you have any leads!! (Photo for attn)

Many American cities have suddenly returned to 1990s levels of homicides. And the link with criminal justice "reform" is painfully obvious. (The fact that the victims of this violence are largely African-American is another uncomfortable topic; when do Black Lives Matter?)

The Election Day/vote by mail split in this poll is terrifying. Trump leads by 20 points for live voting but trails by 40 for mail ballots. So in any close vote Trump will lead on Election Night - but neither side will know who really won.

Think the riots have been bad so far?

Voters planning to vote early in person are breaking for Trump 50% to 49% while those who plan to vote in person on election break for the President 57% to 37%. Voters who said they plan to vote by mail break for Biden 67% to 28%.

This is really dangerous, especially since the Electoral College means very few votes in a handful of states can decide the election. And it is the most likely outcome - even if Biden is winning, he's unlikely to win big enough to be cleanly ahead on election night.

THEY CENSORED IT! It is based entirely on published government data and scientific papers. It doesn't say coronavirus isn't real or doesn't kill people (in fact, the worst-case death toll is likely to be striking to people). And Amazon won't run it.

This guy. This fool. Do you know what he ACTUALLY wanted five weeks ago? A "90% lockdown" - far harder than what we already tried in March and April. Thank God no one listened. The Sunbelt spike ended anyway. Now he says closing bars did the trick...

3. Prohibit interstate travel.

4. Prohibit travel into the country (no one will let us into their country so that shouldn't be hard).

5. Have hotels set up to allow people with symptoms to isolate from their families at no cost.

6. Instead of 50% lockdown (which is what we did in March and April), let's say it's a 90% lockdown. Meaning most of the Americans who couldn't stay home in

-Retail can stay open if bars and indoor dining are closed/severely restricted
-Personal social gatherings of no more than 10
-Full mask mandate

In other words, people started behaving. 4/

Governors in Southern states were slow-- some unforgivably slow-- to respond.

They saw the Northeast as a city problem.
Southern spread was different. Every county had spread. 5/

Fun fact: at $150 a test (the true cost is likely higher), the US is now spending almost $1 billion EVERY WEEK on #Covid tests.

Just on tests.

TESTS THAT HAVE AN UP TO 90% FALSE POSITIVE RATE.

Don't kid yourself: #Covid has become a HUGE business.

Although these measures have mechanistic support based on our knowledge of how influenza is transmitted from person to person, randomized trials of hand hygiene and face masks have not demonstrated protection against laboratory-confirmed influenza, with 1 exception (18). We identified only 2 RCTs on environmental cleaning and no RCTs on cough etiquette.

Hand hygiene is a widely used intervention and has been shown to effectively reduce the transmission of gastrointestinal infections and respiratory infections (26). However, in our systematic review, updating the findings of Wong et al. (8), we did not find evidence of a persons in the general community to reduce their susceptibility (Figure 4). However, as with hand hygiene, face masks might be able to reduce the transmission of other infections and therefore have value in an influenza pandemic when healthcare resources are stretched.

It is essential to note that the mechanisms of person-to-person transmission in the community have not been fully determined. Controversy remains over the role of transmission through fine-particle aerosols (4, 25). Transmission by indirect contact requires transfer of viable virus from respiratory mucosa onto hands and other surfaces, survival on those surfaces, and successful inoculation into the respiratory mucosa of another person. I think we are counting deaths more aggressively than Western Europe at this point (we're testing harder, and I would love to know how many cycles the PCR machines run in France, for example).

But the overall picture is remarkably similar, and it is unlikely to change much.

Just so I'm clear: the old Team Apocalypse theory was SHUT EVERYTHING DOWN OR EVERYONE DIES.

The new Team Apocalypse theory is: close bars and make people wear face diapers (surgical, cloth, N95s, whatev, as long as it covers at least your upper lip) and everything's cool?

Huh.

For reasons I do not entirely understand - maybe dating back to the AIDS epidemic, or maybe because so much academic epidemiology in the US relates to illicit drug use, another highly political topic - epidemiology here is very partisan (and almost entirely Democratic).

And really, specific predictions aside, the biggest question of all was binary: Panic/Don't Panic; Extraordinary restrictions are/aren't needed. Since the end of March the answer to that question has been clear to those of us who were paying attention.

US states are using 37-40 cycles of amplification - meaning they are driving virus levels in their samples up 100-1000 times as high as the German standard. To put it mildly, this is not a trivial difference.

This should be a front-page story, day after day. The number of positive tests has driven so much of our response to the ro.

Imagine if @nytimes etc treated this with half the seriousness with which they treated the USPS "scandal" (which seems to have disappeared, btw)...

1/ Wow. They have known all along.

The @NEJM report on THE VERY FIRST US PATIENT WITH #SARSCoV2 found that the virus was easily detectable after 18-20 PCR cycles on swabs taken on day 4 even though he had only mild symptoms.

Not 40. Not 30. Fewer than 20.

First Case of 2019 Novel Coronavirus in the United States

Michelle L. Holshue, M.P.H., Chas DeBolt, M.P.H., Scott Lindquist, M.D., Kathy H. Lofy, M.D., et al., for the Washington State 2019-nCoV Case Investigation Team*

Results of Real-Time Reverse-Transcriptase–Polymerase-Chain-Reaction Testing for the 2019 Novel Coronavirus (2019-nCoV)

The initial respiratory specimens (nasopharyngeal and oropharyngeal swabs) obtained from this patient on day 4 of his illness were positive for 2019-nCoV (Table 2). The low cycle threshold (Ct) values (18 to 20 in nasopharyngeal specimens and 21 to 22 in oropharyngeal specimens) on illness day 4 suggest high levels of virus in these specimens

Point-of-care testing assays are currently not included in the WHO inventory.

2. What [illegible] value can we expect from an asymptomatic person?

It is recommended that asymptomatic persons should not be tested because this will use up resources needed for testing symptomatic persons. However, based on national resources, testing of asymptomatic persons can be considered as part of contact tracing. Peer-reviewed results on the possible transmission from asymptomatic persons are still too limited to come to a conclusion. A high CT value (e.g. > 35) as a result in E-gene RT-PCR could be due to E-gene positive control contamination of reagents. All positive results should therefore be confirmed by a second gene target.

3. If a patient meets the case definition, but the first sample from the upper respiratory tract is negative, when should the second sample be taken: one day later? two days later? Or depending on the clinical condition of the patient?

It is suggested that testing should be done one to two days apart; if the specimen from the upper respiratory tract is negative, different types of specimens should be collected, particularly from the lower respiratory tract.

Depending on local resources, if the symptoms are mild, priority for testing should be given to patients requiring hospitalisation and cases with risk factors. Regarding sampling practices and case definitions, please consult the recently updated 'Case definition and European surveillance for human infection with novel coronavirus (SARS-CoV-2)' document available at [illegible] and the 2 March 20[illegible]

If IFR is 0.3% (per the new NEJM paper), and the herd immunity threshold is 20%, the epidemic ends ~600 deaths per million. Where have we heard that before? Obviously there's a range. But much higher is likely iatrogenic or a high-density superspreading event (or both, like NYC).

This is very simplified - it doesn't account for age distribution, population density, etc. But it gives a reasonable sense of where we stand and why the epidemics flame out as they do.

I know, it seems like it must be fake - the police invaded someone's home and arrested her for a Facebook post and she's pregnant and has an ultrasound scheduled? - it's what screenwriters call too on the nose, too over the top.

But this is happening.

I suspect one big reason the support for Team Apocalypse is collapsing is the parents of millions of college students are living through scenes like this and can't understand why supposedly well-run institutions are treating their kids - who are at ~0 risk - like prisoners...

We dropped our only child off at LSU in mid August. As you can imagine, taking your child to college thousands of miles away is difficult. We are a close family and my husband and I, although proud and excited for him, were very sad to say goodbye. I think LSU is doing a fair job at handling this situation, but it's heartbreaking all the same. They staggered the dorm move in and as a result, most of the floors were empty. We had two hours to unpack and set up his room. Once we left, we were not allowed back into his room. He spent his first nights at college alone as his roommate had not arrived. The cafeterias are
